Major Field Exam in Post Colonial Literature

For the purposes of the examination, post colonial literature is divided into the following fields:

- African Diaspora
- Indigenous
- Middle East
- East and Southeast Asian Diaspora
- South Asia (primarily India and Pakistan)
- The Global South Asian Diaspora
- Caribbean (still under development; refer to previous exam)
- African (still under development; refer to previous exam)

The aim of studying post colonial as a specialisation is to gain as broad understanding of the field, its literary production, and critical debates as possible. The field, however, is vast and is growing. Students must work with their supervisor to develop a list that includes texts from the Golden Theory list and either two or three fields for a total of 60 texts. In other words, students may decide to divide their exam according to either of the following organizations:

- 3 lists of 20 texts: Golden Theory + Two Regions; or,
- 4 lists of 15 texts: Golden Theory + Three Regions

In composing their lists, students are encouraged to read across genres and be prepared to discuss poetry, drama, and prose for their major field exam. In finalizing their lists, students are allowed to substitute up to 20% of the texts from this document; in exceptional cases more substitutions may be made, but they must be accompanied by a clear rationale.
